GREC EN OBERT [OPEN GREC]

In this year's Grec, there is room for new formats, which are either partially or totally online. There is also room for some innovative international performances. We have suggested to the artists that in the time of Covid-19 they should experiment, wherever they can, and that the performances should be partially in-person.

In this section, there are various performances that connect us with Latin American artists, such as dramatised readings, streamed shows and talks with the most interesting theatre directors of the day. There will also be walks around the City of Barcelona that you can do by yourself or with your family.

You can check all the programming of the Grec En Obert at this link:

The activities are free and can be followed on Recomana's Instagram Live. Keep checking because, from the day immediately before that of the activity and from the same Instagram account, the organisation will take questions from attendees and then, during the session, put them to the group of stage professionals involved in the activity.

How do the sensations of the menstrual cycle translate into the various forms of music and movements in flamenco?

BETEVÉ

Missed out on a ticket to see one of the shows at the Grec? Tune in to betevé, the official TV channel for the festival, because perhaps they can help you out.

Given the health crisis caused by Covid-19, the venues offering shows as part of the programme for the Barcelona Grec Festival 2020 have had to reduce their capacity. Consequently, you may have missed out on seeing a show as there were no more tickets. If that's the case, betevé could be your ally, as they're planning to record some of the shows from the festival and show them at a later date. Keep a check on their programme as you're likely to find some gems from the Barcelona Grec Festival.
